

Douglas & McIntyre sells US rights for Arctic book to University of Alaska Press

Douglas & McIntyre, an imprint of D&M Publishers Inc., has sold US rights to Norman Hallendy’s latest book, Tukiliit: An Introduction to Inuksuit and Other Stone Figures of the North, to the University of Alaska Press and will co-publish the book with them this spring. The deal was arranged without an agent, with the assistance of Kim Mancini, Rights & Permissions Associate at D&M.

For centuries, Inuit and their ancestors have been building beautiful rock structures across the Arctic and sub-Arctic region. These mysterious stone figures are best known as inuksuit. But not all Inuit stone figures are inuksuit; a better general word is tukiliit (singular tukilik). In Inuktitut, tukiliit refers to all meaningful stone objects, anywhere in the world.

Inuksuit, Hallendy’s first book, offered the first serious study of these stone figures and has sold more than thirty thousand copies since its publication in 2001. Tukiliit picks up where Inuksuit left off, and ventures abroad to the windswept hills of Iceland, India, the Faroe Islands and the Utah desert, revealing the presence of inuksuk-like figures. The book features ninety all-new, stunning images of these unique objects, created in ancient and recent times, alongside Hallendy’s thoughtful insights into what inuksuit are, why they are created and what they can tell us about their creator.
